書號 (國際商品條碼 / EAN.number)	作者 書名 (本公司中譯書名)	出版時間	台幣價格
CW10	4711871492813 Giles, H.A. A Chinese-English Dictionary. (翟氏漢英大字典: 古文/文言文釋意及例句) (Shanghai & London 1898, 2 nd Ed. Revised & Enlarged 1912)		NTD 3,050
Still considered to be the best dictionary of its kind, this revised edition presents 10,926 Chinese characters with Romanization into the following dialects: Mandarin, Cantonese, Hakka, Foochow; Wenchow, Ningpo, Peking; Mid.China, Yangchow, Szechuan, Korean, Japanese, and Annamese. The rhyme group of each character in the 佩文韻府 Pei Wen Yun Fu is noted. The characters are arranged alphabetically, but a radical index arranged by stroke is included. A large number of binomes and phrases are presented and translated to illustrate the Chinese meaning, of each character. This work is prefaced with a number of useful tables including Romanization of family names, dynastic reigns, topographical and cylindrical terms.
CW200	4711871492820 Mathews, R.H. Kuoyu Primer (英華合璧) Progressive Studies In The Chinese National Language. (Shanghai: 1938)		1,950
Designed to introduce students to Chinese characters, their usage, and the grammatical structure of modern Mandarin. Forty vocabulary lists giving the character romanixation, definitions, and usage of 1,354 characters are interspersed among 265 sections each explaining one grammatical point with illustrations taken from contemporary modern Mandarin writings, the Chinese Bible and other sources. Forty groups of miscellaneous examples and English sentences for translation appear intermittently. The second part of this volume is devoted to vocabulary list on subjects ranging from human anatomy to astronomy. This volume has character and phrase indexes. Still a useful language tool.
OS3	4711871492868 Grace Wan. A Guide to Gwoyeu Tsyrdian. (國語字典指南) 1969		350
CW301	4711871501263 Arthur H. Smith. Proverbs and Common Sayings from the Chinese (中國諺語與俗話)		2,240
Explained in this book are about 1900 phrases, proberbs, couplets, odes, etc., and more then 300 examples are included. The field covered is so wide that it virtually covers every aspect from the daily life to the universe. One may be surprised to notice the richness of the Chinese language after an examination of the Chinese proverbial sayings.
CW96	4711871499416 Couveur, F.S. Dictionaire Classique De La Langue Chinoise 2 nd Ed. (Shanghai: 1930) (中法古文字典)		3,040
This dictionary includes approximately 21,400 characters arranged according to radical and stroke It is based upon premier Chinese dictionaries of the Ming and Ch'ing periods. Definitions are illustrated by examples taken for the most part from classical texts, i.e. texts from the Chou dynasty to the Ch'ing dynasty. Some illustrations are provided from contemporary official documents, literature, and colloquial language.
CW32	4711871498808 Karlgren, B. Analytic Dictionary Of Chinese And Sino- Japanese (中日解析字典) Paris: 1923		1,760
This is technical, analytical dictionary best appreciated by the philologist, but also useful to the more casual student of the Chinese language. Karlgren introduces his work with a lucid explanation his transcription system, a lengthy discussion of the ancient. Ch'ieh-yun (a dictionary of the sixth century A. D.) system and the evolution of spoken Chinese from Ancient Chinese to the modern Mandarin dialect, and an analysis of the method of creating phonetic compounds. Characters are listed under either their Mandarin sound or according to their phonetics. Mandarin, Cantonese, Ancient Chinese and Japanese pronunciations are given along with definitions, comments on the composition or other technical aspects of the character, pronunciation, etc. Indexed by "radical" and stroke.
M 6	4711871503137 Tse-tsung Chou. A New Index to Mathews' Chiese-English Dictionary (麥氏漢英字典索引). Wisconsin: 1972. (26), 314pp.(缺書)		420

CW61	4711871499089 Karlgren, B. Grammata Serica 高本漢著 (中日漢字形聲論). Script And Phonetics In Chinese And Sino-Japanese. (Reprinted from The Bulletin of The Museum of Far Eastern Antiquities, Stockholm.)	1,280
An indispensable tool for Chinese linguistics, philology, and classical texts. Valuable for study of the evolution of Chinese script, pronunciation and determination of possible loan characters. Karlgren introduces this work with learned essays on the phonetic evolution of Chinese from archaic to ancient, and from ancient to modern Mandarin. The main body of Grammata Serica is composed of characters which occur in each of the following sources: oracle bones, bronzes, pre-Ch'in and some early Han texts. The characters are arranged chronologically from their earliest form and in phonetic series. For each character Karlgren provides his reconstruction of the archaic pronunciation, the ancient sound based primarily on the Ch'ieh-yun dictionary of the sixth century A.D., and the modern Mandarin. The most important meanings in pre-Han texts are also recorded and the source identified. A character index arranged by radical completes this volume.

CW110	4711871499553 Hirth, F. The Ancient History Of China To The End Of The Chou Dynasty (中國古代史). (New York: 1908)	1,280
A classic of Western historiography on ancient China. Hirth surveys China's history from its legendary origins to the end of the Chou. His account, based on primary sources, or collected extracts from primary sources, ranges from mere dissemination of information to penetrating analyses of particular issues current at the turn of this century, some of which are still unsolved today. Useful chronological tables of ancient Chinese history, including the reign years of the rulers of the various states during the Eastern Chou are appended to this Work.

A collector's item. One of the most monumental works yet produced by Western Sinology. In the first nine volumes, de Mailla offers a translation of the T'ung-chien kang-mu written by the famous Sung neo-Confucianist Chu-Hsi. The TCKM is a recasting of Chinese history starting from the legendary origins of China as presented in the Tzu-chih t'ung-chen in order to show the essentials of history as viewed by Chu Hsi. Volumes 10 and 11 supplement the TCKM by bringing the general history through the Yuan, Ming, and mid-Ch'ing on the basis of contemporary historical sources such as Chi-shih-pen-mo. Volume 12 provides a table of nien-hao and an extensive index for the foregoing volumes. Volume 13 is a general survey of the geography, tributary states, natural history, population, manners and customs, government, literature, and arts and sciences in China during de Mailla's own time.

A popular history of the Revolution of 1911 by a personal friend of General Li Yuan-hung, leader of the revolution at Wu-han. This account of the revolution focuses upon the Wu-han area where the author resided and is based upon his personal observations, information obtained from Li, and contemporary documents and statements issued by the participants in the revolution. The role of Li Yuan-hung and his aspirations are treated in detail, peace negotiations are traced with special attention to the role of Sun Yat-sen. The Szechuan revolt is treated separately. This volume offers an inside eyewitness account of the 1911 Revolution and its aftermath.

A detailed, in-depth study of the Chinese educational system conducted by a team of internationally recognized educational experts. The study was conducted at the invitation of the Chinese government and was to serve as the basis for educational reforms. The team's mission was to study the contemporary situation in regard to public education and the long traditions of culture peculiar to the ancient civilization of China, and to submit recommendations on the most suitable procedure to be adopted to ensure a better adaptation of this educational system to the current conditions of life. The study includes a section on the different historical influences on Chinese education, a summary of the educational objectives of Chinese educators, a sociological examination into the social origins of the student body, plus separate chapters on the different levels of public education.

This study surveys the status of government education in China in 1919. How education meets the needs of Chinese life, supply of teachers, extent of education are among the problems discussed. The report also describes urgent educational needs in some areas and tells of Christian missionary efforts in education.
CW298	4711871501232 Freyn, Hubert Chinese Education in the War (抗戰中的教育) (Shanghai: Kelly & Walsh, Ltd., 1940)	770
An account of Chinese educational efforts during the Japanese occupation. Mr. Freyn not only describes the many schools and colleges which trekked west to do their part in the war of "resistance and reconstruction," but also describes the efforts of those teachers and students who stayed behind in occupied territory. The author also devotes a section to the changed objectives of education during wartime—the attention given to mass literacy programs, physical training, and technical and vocational education. This book was published under the auspices of the Nationalist Council of International Affairs in Chungking, so it does not include any of the Communist-sponsored educational efforts.

This monumental work is a survey of the Chinese system of education and literary degrees from its legendary origins in prehistoric times until the mid. nineteenth century. Biot bases his account on two famous Chinese encyclopedias. Wen Hsien T'ung K'ao and Yu Hai, but confirms the accuracy of these sources by frequent reference to original sources from each period. The work is divided dynastically, with more lengthy attention given to the Han, T'ang, Sung, Ming and Ch'ing dynasties. Biot surveys education with regard to subject matter, examination system, evolution, reforms, relations with the Imperial Court, and public reaction at every level from the court and academies at the capital down to the level of primary schools in the localities.

CW300	4711871501256 Chiung, Shu, Yang Kuei-fei (楊貴妃): the Most Famous Beauty Of China (Shanghai: Commercial Press, Ltd., 1923)	800
A slightly fictionalized biography of the famous Chinese courtesan, Yang Kuei-fei. Yang Kuei-fei lived in the time of the T'ang dynasty, and for over twenty years was undisputed mistress of the imperial court. Yang Kuei-fei entered the court of the emperor Hsuan Tsung in 735 AD, and shortly there after became his favorite and most powerful mistress. Her romantic, powerful, yet ultimately tragic life has long been a favorite theme among Chinese poets, playwrights, and novelists. The author has tried to sort out history from fiction and provide a relatively accurate account of Yang Kuei-fei's life. Her sources include several traditional Chinese biographies, plus references in the standard historical works. This biography not, only recounts the life of a most interesting woman, but also portrays unique aspects of Chinese culture and psychology.

This book offers a look at Shanghai during the early twentieth century. The author gives a brief history of the city of Shanghai and then goes on to describe modern Shanghai and in particular the effect of the new foreign presence in the city. Shanghai, at that time, was unique because of the many people represented in her population. Her physical, political and commercial features, as well as her culture, reflected this diversity.

A Chinese view of the history of the International Settlement at Shanghai. During the early history of the Settlement the author focuses upon treaty provisions and land regulations. His account of the origin, and establishment of the International Mixed Court in the settlement of 1911 focuses on the relationship between the Chinese judicial officials and the foreign assessors authorized to sit on cases involving foreigners and Chinese. The changes in the Mixed Court between 1911 and 1926 and the impact of the Hsin-hai Revolution and the May 30th incident are discussed. The origin and operation of the Shanghai Provisional Court from 1927 to 1929 is also described and analyzed. Additional topics include a discussion of the gradual extension of the Settlement territory and a critique of its government. The appendices include the texts of major documents relevant of the Settlement.

Divided into three parts, this work concerns the condition of Formosa under Dutch rule. The first part is a general description of the island's trade, religion and topography. The second part concerns the missionary work carried out by the Dutch while on Formosa. Part three retells the Chinese conquest of Formosa.
CW165	4711871496606 Clark, J.D. Formosa (福爾摩沙). (Shanghai: 1896)	960
J.D. Clark having taken most of his information from the Decennial Reports of the Chinese Imperial Maritime Customs, 1882-1891, begins with a brief history of the events around the year 1882, and continues in fuller detail of the years between 1885 and 1895, and Japanese occupation. In addition to an historical description, the author, seeing Formosa as a rich island, pays particular attention to her industrial and agricultural aspects, with much detail on the two cities of Tamsui and Tainan.
CW34	4711871496644 Imbault Huart, C. L'île Formose (福爾摩沙島歷史). Histoire Et Description (Paris: 1893)	1,760
This work opens with an extensive annotated bibliography by H. Cordier of works related to Formosa in Chinese, Japanese, and European languages The historical portion of this work is based primarily on official Chinese accounts of Formosa and European scholarship. The history begins with Chinese raids on Formosa in 605 A.D. The Dutch occupation, rise and reign of Koxinga and his descendants, Ch'ing conquest, and Japanese occupation are discussed in turn. The descriptive portion is devoted to geography, political organization, agriculture, industry and commerce, the people, and travel in Formosa Maps and illustrations abound.

The main objective of this monograph is to examine and explore one aspect of political elite activities in the process of social and political change in modern China between 1912-49, namely, patterns of political elite career mobility. Attention is given to the socioeconomic backgrounds of political elites, political recruitment mechanisms, personality development and patterns of political career mobility. What are the new mechanisms through which people can move into the political bureaucracy? What social organization supply the potential candidates? What are the new social institutions for the training and socialization of the political leaders? Are the new Chinese political elites different from the traditional ones? What is the role of the military in modern Chinese politics and the formation of Chinese political leadership...

D2 International relations 國際關係

CW92	4711871499379 Morse, H. B. The International Relations Of The Chinese Empire. (中國清代國際關係) 3 vols.	4,320
A standard reference work. These volumes by Morse, comprise an exhaustive account of Chinese foreign relations under the Ch'ing until the collapse of the dynasty in 1912. Morse bases his account upon the official documents of the foreign powers and translations of Chinese documents relevant to foreign relations. Unlike other diplomatic histories which, focus on major events, or the service of particular individuals in the foreign diplomatic corps, this is a comprehensive diplomatic history which includes many of the more mundane aspects of diplomatic activity that had an important cumulative effect in moulding opinion and policy decisions.

Divided into two volumes, this work provides a statement of the rights of foreigners and interests of foreign states in China as indicated by official and semi-official treaties standing in 1927. Topics included are China's treaty commitments, the Open Door in China, spheres of interest, extraterritoriality, missionary rights, foreign patents and many others.
CW190	4711871500327 Sze, Tsung-yu, China And The Most-Favored-Nation Clause (中國最惠國家條款). (New York, Chicago, London & Edinburgh: 1925)	1,090
A scholarly treatise analyzing the nature of the most-favored-nation clause and its actual application by Western Powers in China from 1844 to 1925. The author delineates various schools of interpretation concerning the most-favored-nation clause, and then shows how this clause was systematically abused by the Western Powers to press special economic and political claims. He also analyzes the attempts to subvert the most-favored-nation clause by establishing the right of preferential treatment and examines this development in relation to the Open Door Policy. This is a valuable volume for students of international relations.

This volume is the report to the Lytton Commission sent to China by the League of Nations at the request of China to investigate the Mukden Incident of September 18 1931 and the general Sino-Japanese conflict in Manchuria. The report surveys the modern political history of China and Manchuria, and outlines Japanese interests in Manchuria and points of conflict with China before the Mukden interest. The political and military events of September 18. 1931 and after are detailed in three chapters including military action in Manchuria, the Shanghai affair, and the creation of Manchukuo. The impact of Chinese boycotts on Japanese economic interests in general is discussed as a factor in the Sino-Japanese dispute, and the economic interests of China and Japan in Manchuria are evaluated. The report closes with a discussion of principles for a settlement and the suggestions of the Commission. Appended to the report are numerous large foldout, political, economic, and military maps of Manchuria and other key areas.

CW189	4711871500310 Chung, Henry The Oriental Policy Of The United States (美國東方外交政策). (New York, Chicago. London & Edinburgh: 1919)	1,090
An interpretive and stimulating essay by a Korean on the development of the oriental policy of the United States and Japanese control of its development at the end of WWI. The author traces the history of United States policy from Perry's arrival in Japan in 1853 through WWI, focusing particularly on the American attitude toward the expansionary activities of Japan, and the Japanese and Chinese views of American policy. The Lansing Ishii Agreement is singled out for special analysis in this respect. The author maintains that the policy of the United States during the first two decades of the twentieth century was shaped by Japanese manipulation or control of publicity. To support his argument he details and analyzes the Japanese espionage system, government censorship, and publicity propaganda institutions, agents, and methods. Appended to this work are 21 official documents bearing on the author's thesis.

By Z.D. Sung is a fully illustrated introduction to one of the sacred books of China, "Written by four ancient sages and ever supported by the leading philosophers of the times... the uses of Yi have been kept as esoteric secrets by philosophers, mainly as a precaution against abuses, and therefore as yet remain a mystery. It is supposed that one who really understands them would know everything and thus attain knowledge of the future." The first of two volumes, it consists of three parts; introduction, exhibits and remarks. Intended to serve merely as an introduction, this volume concerns itself solely with a study of the symbols.

Companion volume to The Symbols of Yi King. In compiling this work, as in the first volume, the author uses materials from James Legge's The Yi King While the first volume acts merely as an introduction to the Yi-King -one of the sacred books of China- the second volume discusses the text and the two technical terms 9 and 6, which have been disregarded by Legge. The terms, which exist in the Chinese original, are "reinserted in their proper places throughout the whole work to designate unbroken and broken lines." Sung also makes reference 10 the Chinese original, which, "will assist one to understand the text better." The work consists of two parts: the text, and the appendixes. It is not only useful to the Chinese students, but also to foreign students who are interested in studying the Yi King in its original form.

CW19	4711871498679 Giles, H. A San Tzu Ching (三字經), Three Character Classic Or Elementary Chinese. 2nd Ed. Revised. (1910)	450
The San Tzu Ching, attributed to the authorship of Wang Ying-lin (A.D. 1223-1296), was used as an elementary guide to knowledge for Chinese school children prior to the founding of the Republic. It is composed of "356 alternately rhyming lines of three characters to each, and containing about 500 different characters in all " The text of the San Tzu Ching teaches basic Confucian concepts of man and human relationships, exhorts the youth to learn, and introduces the Classics, Philosophers and the chronology of Chinese history. Giles gives the Mandarin pronunciation of each word, and a literal and a free translation for every phrase. The explanatory notes following each line of text give a structural analysis of every new character-according to the Shuo Wen, a dictionary of the second century A. D.-and additional comments. This volume is an interesting introduction to classical Chinese language and fundamental philosophical concepts.

The Kan Ying Pien, a short religious tract of popular Taoism, stands as another example of the synergetic nature of Chinese folk religion. Webster introduces the use of tracts in Chinese literature and outlines the origin and nature of popular Taoism. He also discusses the date and authorship of the text, noting that it is variously attributed to Lao Tze (6th Cent. B.C.). Ko Hung (4th Cent. A.D.), and to unknown authorship in the 15th or 16th century A.D. After an analytical summary of the text, Webster offers the Chinese text translation, and grammatical and informational notes. The appendices of this work include a list of phrases from the text which have become proverbial and a vocabulary list. A useful contribution to the study of comparative religion.

The first full study of the Sung philosopher Li Kou is a welcome consequence of the application of high-grade sinological skills to the stimulating questions raised by such earlier commentators on Li Kou at Etienne Balazs's Morohashi Tetsuji, Honda Sei and Fumoto Yasutaka. The relation of Li Kou to the reformer Wang An-shih and the problem of the relation between the tow as men and as thinkers has long fascinated Sung specialists and students of philosophy. The author concludes with admirable frankness that Li Kou does not stand "among the most outstanding thinkers of Chinese history." His contributions were rather "logical extension of what had already been said in the Analects, the Mencius, and Hsun Tzu."

A classic in the study of Chinese religions. In an attempt to illustrate the influence of Chinese religion on domestic and social life, these volumes present a comprehensive picture of Chinese religion. Each of the six volumes deals extensively with one pan of the religious system. The first covers death and funeral rites; the second, the soul; the third, Taoism; the fourth, ramifications of religion in China, the fifth. Buddhism; and the sixth, the State Religion.

Spurred by the Boxer Rebellion in 1900 and the anti-missionary literature which appeared in the European press blaming missionaries for provoking the religiously tolerant Chinese to this sort of hostility, de Groot traces the history of sectarianism and religious persecution from the Spring and Autumn period (771-221 B.C.) to 1900 in order to show that the Chinese, the Government in particular, were not tolerant of unorthodox religions and why De Groot has collected and translated many passages from classical texts and official documents in a literal manner to make his case. A scholarly rebuttal of Boone's argument that 'God' and 'Elohim' should be rendered in Chinese as 'shen'. Boone's thesis is that the Chinese knew of no single being comparable to the God of Christianity and consequently had no word which could be applied to God. Rather, they were polytheistic and used a general term 'shen' to identify a god or the gods. Boone advocated the adoption of this term into the Christian lexicon for 'God.' Legge attempts to refute every part of Boone's argument and to establish that the Chinese were properly monotheistic, did in fact identify the Deity as 'Shang-ti' and that 'shen' can only be used to translate the English word, 'spirit' or 'spirits'. Legge makes his argument from Chinese texts beginning with the Book of Odes and extending down through the various dynasties. This work is an example of the theological controversies of the early Protestant missionary movement in China and of special interest to students of religion and philosophy.

Essays in Zen Buddhism Vol. 1 By Daiseiz Teitaro Suzuki is a collection of essays originally published in the Eastern Buddhist including such topics as: Zen as The Chinese Interpretation of The Doctrine of Enlightenment; Enlightenment and Ignorance; History of Zen Buddhism in China, from Bodhidharma to the Sixth Patriarch (Hui-neng); Satori; Practical Methods of Zen Instruction; The Meditation Hall and the Ideals of Zen Life; and The Ten Cow-Herding Pictures. All of the essays have been thoroughly revised and in some parts entirely rewritten and new chapters added. In the second series of Zen essays the chief stress has been placed in the study of "The Koan Exercise". "The Koan system has effected a special development in Zen Buddhism and is a unique contribution Zen has made to the history of the religious consciousness. When the importance of the Koan is understood, we may say that more than half of Zen is understood." Also included in this volume are, "The Secret Message of Bodhidharma", "The Two Zen Text Books", and "Passivity In The Buddhist Life". These articles first appeared in The Eastern Buddhist, They reappear here after having undergone a thorough revision with new materials added.

"The Wheel of Law or Buddhism is, in this volume, illustrated by three distinct essays or parts, which exemplify the Sceptical phase, the traditionary phase, and the ultra-superstitious phase." The first part is a revised and enlarged edition of a previous essay, entitled "Modern Buddhist," which gives the reader a summary of an eminent Siamese Nobleman's ideas on Buddhism and other religions. The second section which illustrates the traditionary phase is "Life of Buddha" which commences with events previous to Buddha's, last birth and ends with his attainment of Buddhahood. It was translated from a popular Siamese work "Pathomma Somphothiyan". The third section, describing the ultra-superstitious phase, is an account of the "Phrabat or Siamese Footprint of Buddha" In the description of his journey to visit the Phrabat the author recounts impressions of the Sismese people, monks and temples.

Noting the wealth of literature in the West on Confucianism, the author writes to fill a void in previous writings in English which have "given too little attention to the religions of Buddha and Tao." He does a comparative study of the three "religions" under such categories as conflicts and coexistence, notions of God and morality, sin, immortality, and redemption. He further examines Roman Catholic mission efforts, and the condition of some minor religious communities such as the Muslims, Jews and Zen Buddhists, The final chapter contains the author's estimation of the religious spirit motivating the T'ai-p'ing rebels, who had been active for seven years at the time of writing.

This diary is a remarkable work, touching as it does. At so many points on vital aspects of Japanese thought and culture. As already indicated, though the scenery it depicts is localized, it deals notably with elements of thought that Japan and China have shared in common. The work presents a panoramic view of both thought and scenery, a landscape of the mind and of nature. The book voices intense patriotism. Much of the mythology is strictly Japanese, indeed the work is virtually compendium of Japanese folklore and philosophy. The two chief shrines visited by the pilgrim are, in turn, Buddhist and Shinto There are quotations from the Taoist Chuang-tzu and even a few echoes from the Confucian classics.

The Kan Ying Pien, a short religious tract of popular Taoism, stands as another example of the synergetic nature of Chinese folk religion. Webster introduces the use of tracts in Chinese literature and outlines the origin and nature of popular Taoism. He also discusses the date and authorship of the text, noting that it is variously attributed to Lao Tze (6th Cent. B.C.). Ko Hung (4th Cent. A.D.), and to unknown authorship in the 15th or 16th century A.D. After an analytical summary of the text, Webster offers the Chinese text translation, and grammatical and informational notes. The appendices of this work include a list of phrases from the text which have become proverbial and a vocabulary list. A useful contribution to the study of comparative religion.

Part of the series Varietes Sinologiques, this comprehensive work on Chinese superstitions was first published by the Jesuit Fathers of the Shanghai Mission. Rev. Dore visited many parts of China, studying the religions and superstitions of the people. The author made three divisions in this work: superstitious practices in general; a biography of gods and goddesses; and a history of Confucius, Lao-tze and Buddha. This work covers the subject of Chinese religions and superstitions very thoroughly and is profusely illustrated.
CW97	4711871499423 Day, C. B Chinese Peasant Cults (中國民間信仰-紙神研究). Being A Study Of Chinese Paper Gods. (Shanghai: 1940)	1,440
A valuable detailed study and analysis of the importance and function of "paper gods" (ma-chang) in Chinese peasant cults. The paper gods, which are the center of household religious ceremonies, hold the key to understanding the religious attitude of the peasant. In an attempt to interpret the paper gods from the point of view of the peasant and to seek out the origins of the paper gods, the author collected over 2000 paper gods, mostly from northern Chekiang, interviewed numerous villagers, Buddhist and Taoist priests, and searched relevant documentary material from the Chinese classics to modern times. The findings of this investigation are presented in three parts: (1) an introduction to the place of paper gods in peasant cults, the social milieu of village sacrifices, and certain peasant ceremonies; (2) a survey of religious values sought in cult practices relating to temporal, domestic, and spiritual welfare; and (3) a conclusion discussing the affinities between contemporary cult practices and ancient Chinese religion, the syncretic growth of peasant cults, and the disintegration and transformation of peasant cults under pressure from the changes in modern Chinese society. Excellent black and white, and color illustrations.

A valuable monograph showing the importance of mountains in Chinese religion and the special place of T'ai Shan among the holy mountains of China. Chavannes surveys the religious cult associated with T'ai Shan, describes the manmade structures and physical features of the mountain, offers a variety of translations (historical texts relevant to the Imperial Feng and Shan sacrifices, prayers offered to T'ai Shan from the fifth to eighteenth century, and stone stele inscriptions made by visitors to T'ai Shan from the second century A.D.) to illustrate the historical and religious importance of T'ai Shan, and takes note of popular beliefs concerning T'ai Shan in folklore, particularly the magical properties of the mountain. The appendix to this volume is a separate essay "The God of the Earth in Ancient China," also of great value. In this essay Chavannes discusses the multiplicity of earth gods, the altar of the God of the Earth, the significance of the tree or grove, and the various functions assigned to the God of the Earth. Richly illustrated with reproductions of many of the Chinese texts.

A biography of Bishop Ingle (1867-1903), missionary in Hangchow. Rather than being a narrative of the life and work of Ingle, this volume is essentially the publication of his personal letters with some edition, and the letters of family members and fellow missionaries. In this respect this biography is a major departure from typical biographical writing about China missionaries. The activities and reactions of Bishop Ingle are presented firsthand without the intervention of time and recall,

CW19	4711871498679 Giles, H. A San Tzu Ching (三字經), Three Character Classic Or Elementary Chinese. 2nd Ed. Revised. (1910)	450
The San Tzu Ching, attributed to the authorship of Wang Ying-lin (A.D. 1223-1296), was used as an elementary guide to knowledge for Chinese school children prior to the founding of the Republic. It is composed of "356 alternately rhyming lines of three characters to each, and containing about 500 different characters in all " The text of the San Tzu Ching teaches basic Confucian concepts of man and human relationships, exhorts the youth to learn, and introduces the Classics, Philosophers and the chronology of Chinese history. Giles gives the Mandarin pronunciation of each word, and a literal and a free translation for every phrase. The explanatory notes following each line of text give a structural analysis of every new character-according to the Shuo Wen, a dictionary of the second century A. D.-and additional comments. This volume is an interesting introduction to classical Chinese language and fundamental philosophical concepts.

The chief theme of this historical romance is the nature of human ambition. Until modern times, this type of fiction was ignored by Chinese scholars. Thus, traditional Chinese studies could leave out entire genres of literature. Novels, such as this one written by scholars when "off duty" from their normal work, provide an exciting look at the feelings of the Chinese scholar toward his society.

Emperor Chien-wen of the Liang dynasty(梁) is credited as being the most prolific litterateur of any of the Chinese royal houses. He is also given much of the credit for the establishment of the "palace-style" genre in the Chinese classical poetic tradition. Long considered decadent by traditional Chinese scholarship, this genre and the poetry in general of the sixth century has not been the subject of interest of historicians of Chinese literature. But the influence of the poetry of this period on the development of the Chinese poetic tradition cannot be denied. And the poetry of Emperor Chien-wen is by far the most representative and technically brilliant poetry of this period.

The novel deals with the collapse of traditional society and the rise of the Communist movement in China. Set in the author's native Shantung province, the action of the novel takes place between the May Four movement of 1919 and the early years of the Second World War. The background reflects the author's youth in a large rural gentry clan, and the ways of that vanished society are portrayed with intimate understanding. Acclaimed by Chinese critics as a modern master piece.

A collection of five short stories and two plays by Shih Shu-ch'ing (施淑青) A young author-play wright widely acclaimed in Taiwan. In contrast to much of recent Chinese fiction, these short stories and plays evidence a certain fascination with what is strange or even a bit bizarre in human nature. Reflected in them, perhaps, are aspects of the author's childhood in central Taiwan and her experiences encountered while living for several years in New York.

This diary is a remarkable work, touching as it does. At so many points on vital aspects of Japanese thought and culture. As already indicated, though the scenery it depicts is localized, it deals notably with elements of thought that Japan and China have shared in common. The work presents a panoramic view of both thought and scenery, a landscape of the mind and of nature. The book voices intense patriotism. Much of the mythology is strictly Japanese, indeed the work is virtually compendium of Japanese folklore and philosophy. The two chief shrines visited by the pilgrim are, in turn, Buddhist and Shinto There are quotations from the Taoist Chuang-tzu and even a few echoes from the Confucian classics.

Still considered to be the best dictionary of its kind, this revised edition presents 10,926 Chinese characters with romanization into the following dialects: Mandarin, Cantonese, Hakka, Foochow, Wenchow, Ningpo. Peking Mid-China, Yangchow, Szechuan, Korean, Japanese, and Annamese. The rhyme group of each character in the P'ei Wen Yun Fu is noted. The characters are arranged alphabetically, but a radical index arranged by stroke is included. A large number of binomes and phrases are presented and translated to illustrate the Chinese meaning, of each character This work is prefaced with a number of useful tables including romanization of family names, dynastic reigns, topographical and calendrical term

Taking the view that the Chinese had gradually occupied China, only achieving nominal occupation during the seventeenth century A.D., this study concerns not only the non-Chinese languages of antiquity, but also languages of aboriginal people in various parts of China to the eighteenth century. This work is based on traces of aboriginal dialects in the Chinese language and ancient works such as the Erh-ya, Fang-yen, and Shuo-wen, in addition to firsthand reports by European travelers. The Mon-Tai, Mon-Khmer, Tai-Shan and Kuenlunie dialects are discussed in detail. The mutual influence of the language of the aborigines and Chinese intruders are also examined.

Two lectures which were delivered at the Royal Institute of Great Britain in May and June 1875, by Robert K. Douglas of the British Museum, and professor of Chinese at Kings College, London. The first lecture, concerning itself with the Chinese language, presents the six classes into which the native philologists have divided Chinese characters. Mr. Douglas discusses each class giving several examples of each. In the second lecture, or Chinese literature part of the book, Douglas discusses the nine Chinese Classics, the writings and teachings of Confucius, the Chinese play, and contemporary literature.
CW301	4711871501263 Arthur H. Smith Proverbs and Common Sayings from the Chinese (中國諺語與俗話)	2,240
Explained in this book are about 1900 phrases, proverbs, couplets, odes, etc., and more than 300 examples are included. The field covered is so wide that it virtually covers every aspect from the daily life to the universe. One may be surprised to notice the richness of the Chinese language after an examination of the Chinese proverbial sayings.
CW251	4711871500877 Brandt, J. J. Wenli Particles (虛字指南). With A Foreword By Hardy Jowett (Peiping: 1929)	960
This book is a collection of 194 most commonly used particles (hsu-tz'u), The particles are classified into twenty-seven categories according to their general functions and each function is elucidated. The major portion of this work consists of an alphabetical arrangement of the 194 particles according to the Wade system of romanization. The specific function, or functions, of each particle are defined, and numerous textual illustrations are given. A handy concise volume dealing with one of the most troublesome aspects of the Chinese written language for foreign students.
CW200	4711871492820 Mathews, R. H. Kuoyu Primer (英華合璧). Progressive Studies In The Chinese National Language. (Shanghai: 1938)	1,950
Designed to introduce students to Chinese characters, their usage, and the grammatical structure of modern Mandarin dialect. Forty vocabularies lists giving the character, romanization, definitions, and usage of 1,354 characters are interspersed among 265 sections each explaining one grammatical point with illustrations taken from contemporary modern Mandarin writings, the Chinese Bible, and other sources. Forty groups of miscellaneous examples and English sentences for translation appear intermittently. The second part of this volume is devoted to vocabulary lists on subjects ranging from human anatomy to astronomy. This volume is indexed by character and phrase. Still a useful language tool.

This dictionary includes approximately 21,400 characters arranged according to radical and stroke. It is based upon premier Chinese dictionaries of the Ming and Ch'ing periods. Definitions are illustrated by examples taken for the most part from classical texts, i.e. texts from the Chou dynasty to the Ch'ing dynasty. Some illustrations are provided from contemporary official documents, literature, and colloquial language.
CW32	4711871498808 Karlgren, B. Analytic Dictionary Of Chinese And Sino-Japanese (中日分析字典). 1923	1,760
This is a technical, analytical dictionary best appreciated by the philologist, but also useful to the more casual student of the Chinese language. Karlgren introduces his work with a lucid explanation of his transcription system, a lengthy discussion of the ancient Ch'ieh-yun (a dictionary of the sixth century A.D.) system and the evolution of spoken Chinese from Ancient Chinese to the modern Mandarin dialect, and an analysis of the method of creating phonetic compounds. Characters are listed under either their Mandarin sound or according to their phonetics. Mandarin, Cantonese, Ancient Chinese, and Japanese pronunciations, are given along with definitions, comments on the composition or other technical aspects of the character, pronunciation, etc. Indexed by "radical" and stroke.

An indispensable tool for Chinese linguistics, philology, and classical texts. Valuable for study of the evolution of Chinese script, pronunciation and determination of possible loan characters. Karlgren introduces this work with learned essays on the phonetic evolution of Chinese from archaic to ancient and from ancient to modern Mandarin. The main body of Grammata Serica is composed of characters which occur in each of the following sources: oracle bones, bronzes, pre-Ch'in and some early Han texts The characters are arranged chronologically from their earliest form and in phonetic series. For each character Karlgren provides his reconstruction of the archaic pronunciation, the ancient sound based primarily on the Ch'ieh-yun dictionary of the sixth century A. D., and the modern Mandarin. The most important meanings in pre-Han texts are also recorded and the source identified. A character index arranged by radical completes this volume.

The author has in fact tried to make the learning of Cantonese easy. Starting with the commonest expressions he has placed a great deal of emphasis on colloquial, rather than book language, and in this regard created a book primarily for teaching the everyday spoken language. He does not attempt to teach or even encourage learning of the written language. As an additional aid to the student he has rendered the Chinese expressions into both literal and free translations, hoping to lead the student closer to the meanings of individual Chinese words.

Through a philological analysis of the Chinese, Semitic, and Turanian language families, Edkins attempts to prove the veracity of the Biblical assertion that all men once shared a common language. Following introductory remarks concerning comparative institutions and geographical distribution of languages, the author proceeds to a technical discussion of the various languages. He asserts that the primeval language was monosyllabic and that this appears most strongly in the Chinese language, proof that the Chinese left Western Asia about 5,000 years ago. Semitic language developed later and had a syntactic influence on the languages of Southeast and Central Asia. Japanese, Dravidian, and Mongol are analyzed as representative of the development of Turanian language family Edkin maintains that the primeval monosyllabic language is still evident in the radical syllabaries of modern European languages.

The Structural Principles of the Chinese Language: An Introduction to the Spoken Languages (Northern Pekingese Dialect). Modestly described as a handbook for study of the dialect of Peking, this work is in fact an ambitious linguistic description of the phonology and syntax of northern Mandarin, the scope of which is unparalleled by more modern works. The work is informed by the author's sound philological and linguistic training and an intimate acquaintance with the historical development of the Chinese language and with its dialectical variation. CW207	4711871500488 Baker, C. C. Tai Shan (東嶽泰山) ; An Account Of The Sacred Eastern Peak Of China. (Shanghai: 1925)	900
This volume is primarily a description of the landmarks encountered in the pilgrimage up the road to the summit of T'ai Shan, a holy mountain from China's antiquity. Numerous Taoist, Buddhist, and Confucian shrines that dot the Mountain side are described in detail with a brief-history of each. Other manmade structures and natural phenomena of significance are treated in a similar fashion. The Temples of the Jade Emperor and of Confucius at the summit are dealt with in greater detail as are other important summit sites. A special section is devoted to the Temple of the Mountain Tai (Tai-miao), the center of worship at the time this book was authored. The descriptive portion of this volume is followed by a summary of the Annals of T'ai Shan giving an account of the visits of Emperors from antiquity to the Ch'ing Dynasty, particularly detailed with respect to the latter.

An expanded version of the 1909 edition by the same title. This volume includes Saussure's essay "Le texte astronomique du Yao-Tien" and another installment of "Les engines de l'astronomie Chinoise" entitled "Le zodiac lunaire." The critical book review by Pogo points out the items among Saussure's publications on Chinese astronomy in T'oung Pao which were inadvertently omitted in this collection of reprints. The bibliography of Saussure's writings by P. Pelliot is complete and is a valuable supplement to this volume. More than two-thirds of Saussure's extensive publications are related to the study of astronomy and cosmology in China.
CW59	4711871499065 Schlegel, G. Uranographic Chinoise (星辰考原)Ou Preuves Directes Que L'Astronomie Primitive Est Originnaire De La Chine, Et Qu'elle A Ele Empruntee Par Les Anciens Peuples Occidentaux A La Sphere Chinoise: Ouvrage Accompanme D'un Atlas Celeste Chinois Et Grac. (Leiden: 1875) 2 vols.	2,240
A detailed history of the development of Chinese uranography attempting to prove that astronomy originated among the Chinese and was consequently borrowed and adapted by the people of Africa and West Asia. From Chinese classical texts Schlegel traces the course of astronomy from its beginnings in legendary times through the historic period to the nineteenth century. The primary topics of concern are the beginning of stellar observations and classification, the origin of the names of the constellations and their observation, zodiac concepts and planetary observation. Chinese achievements in these areas are compared to those of other ancient people, namely the Chaldeans, the Egyptians, and the Greeks. Geographical, historical, and ethnographical proofs are adduced to establish the antiquity of the Chinese relative to these people, and probable routes of transmission of astronomical data to Western Asia from China are discussed.
